

Profile of a Graduate of the study program Economics and Management of Public Administration

The graduate of the study program acquires knowledge and skills to:

- apply basic theories, concepts and facts of the general system of economics and the economy with emphasis on its regional and local sub-system,
- systematise and analyse current problems of public administration equipped with basic knowledge of the legislative environment of public administration, methods and techniques of the analysis used to solve general problems, methods of management applicable to public administration,
- apply theoretical knowledge in processing of specialised documents for the adoption of decisions made by public administration bodies;
- assess the feasibility of the proposed measures on the basis of the analysis of economic facts and applicable laws,
- use basic methods and techniques of regional analysis, project writing and management, basic methods of regional and spatial analysis and research, and statistical methods;
- develop and implement economic and social development programs of regions, cities and municipalities,
- communicate effectively in at least one foreign language, with a working knowledge of another foreign language.

Profile and prospective employment opportunities of the graduate

The graduate is able to:

- cooperate in economic and social development projects of the respective public administration level;
- exploit methods and instruments of economic, regional and municipal policy,
- effectively perform in individual sections of public administration,
- develop, write and implement basic projects in the field of public administration, local and regional development.